Leo and the Dinosaur Valley

A dinosaur adventure starring Leo

STARWREN

Leo loved dinosaurs and bugs. One morning in the garden he found a footprint. A giant footprint! “That is no ordinary beetle,” said Leo.

He followed the tracks through a gap in the hedge and gasped. On the other side was a hidden valley with giant ferns and a sparkling river.

Tall green dinosaurs munched on treetops. Leo opened his notebook. “I’m going to draw every single one,” he said.

Then Leo heard a sniffle. A baby stegosaurus was hiding behind a rock. “I’m Spike,” he said. “I lost my herd!”

“I’ll help you,” said Leo. “Real explorers never give up.” He tucked his notebook in his pocket, and they set off together.

Rumble, rumble! A volcano puffed a little cloud of smoke. Spike trembled. Leo took a deep breath. “It’s just grumbling,” he said. “Let’s keep going.”

A wide river blocked the path. Leo spotted a fallen tree. “Let’s make a bridge!” Leo pushed, Spike pushed, and the log rolled into place.

On the other side they found big, bumpy tracks. Leo looked closer with his magnifying glass. “Those are your family’s footprints,” he said. Spike wagged his tail.

The tracks led to a sunny meadow. There was Spike's whole herd! "Spike!" they rumbled happily. Spike ran to them as fast as his little legs could go.

The big dinosaurs gathered around Leo. One bent down and gently touched his nose with her own. “Thank you, little explorer,” she rumbled.

Spike gave Leo a smooth green stone from the river. “So you remember me,” he said. Leo waved goodbye and walked back through the hedge.

That night Leo set the green stone on his shelf and drew Spike on the last page of his notebook. “Tomorrow,” he whispered, “I’ll look for more footprints.” The End.

Made just for Leo

Leo followed a giant footprint and found a whole valley of dinosaurs, and a little friend who needed an explorer.

For Leo. (Sample book: Leo is a fictional child, made from a fictional AI portrait.)
